Adrian Corker (<https://www.adriancorker.com/>) is a musician and writer of music to picture who uses a number of methods for composition including notation, improvisation and the manipulation of sound through various mechanical, non-digital mediums. Recent work 'Since It Turned Out Something Else' used composition for acoustic instruments with electroacoustic techniques and structures.

There is a continued exploration of space as a compositional material in his work and the interplay between the mechanical / electronic with the human gesture and the change in agency affected on people by our use of digital networks.

He is based in London and also co runs two labels SN Variations and Constructive.
