Aloïs Yang (<http://aloiyang.com/>), born in 1986 Dax, France, raised in Taiwan, now based in London, is a sound artist, designer and electronic musician who produces work that explores the relation and interaction between people, sound, and the external world. His work is influenced both by scientific reference and human imperfection of understanding the nature.

He overcomes the separation of art forms and genres with an integrated creative approach. He uses a wide range of media, from experiential sound installation to fictional story telling videos and live digital music performance.

His work crafts a journey with open endings to both artist and audience, pushing the interaction to not just physical, but also imaginative projections. These include personal and large-scale projections of time and space, traveling among issues such as brain function, facial expression, starlight and apocalypse.
